To look at all our resources, we have an organized site with all our resources here, in the style of Steve Jobs, just one more thing, I'll probably put this on top of this post, but I'm assuming if you're looking You'll probably know what they are. However, just in case we go here. The phonics has a lot of jargon to help teachers understand (or confuse them, they are still uncertain about this) One of these collections is jargon and abbreviations CVC. It simply consists of the consonant - vowel - Consonant. These are made from some of the simplest words in English each containing a short vowel sound. They are perfect for emerging readers, as they use a single sounds that can be mixed together to make words. When students grasped the concept you can add CVC (it's probably worth it to get out) and then CCVC (and I'm sure you'll work out this as well) Post by Marc about Making English Fun About the Author Hi I'm Marc. The teacher has been mostly English for more than 15 years, but has dabbled in outdoor activities and media. Thought was the time to share both what I learned during this time and the resources I had put together. On this page, our goal is to teach the theory and share our thoughts, but also to go a step further and give you access to the hard resources you need for your class or for your children. Feel free to take a look at our resources, email us info@makingenglishfun.com or jump to the Facebook group to ask questions. Happy learning, teaching or playing! Plays!
